The installation creates a new aggregative space for the inhabitants of all ages in Baitasi: it transforms the existing space in a new place, where the human scale is exalted through the arrangement of different games from China and Europe. An imaginary volume is positioned indifferently inside the existing buildings and outdoor.

It becomes a community-making tool, where people can aggregate, spend time together playing or, simply, talking. In this way the liveliness of the Chinese public space is brought within the private sphere, redefining the traditional boundaries between public and private.
